Incident Report / Evidence Submission Memo

Potential Coercion / Extortion — For Law Enforcement Review

Prepared by: Daniel Pall (also known as TechyMechy)

Claimant email: mechaniel@gmail.com

Date prepared: June 2, 2026

Subject: Jonathan Dunnigan / X-CEED Tech Solutions LLC — potential coercion/extortion pattern for law enforcement review

Statute: Michigan Penal Code § 750.213 — Malicious threats to extort money / compel act against will > Important notice: This document is a factual summary of events prepared to assist law enforcement in evaluating a potential coercion/extortion incident. It is not legal advice and does not constitute a determination that any crime was committed. All legal characterizations are presented as potential theories for law enforcement review, not as final conclusions. Daniel Pall should consult a licensed attorney regarding his rights.

Probable Cause Summary

On May 30, 2026, Jonathan Dunnigan (jzdunnigan@yahoo.com, 3627 Buckingham, Detroit MI 48224) sent a written email threatening to pursue criminal fraud charges against Daniel Pall if Pall continued to seek payment for wages earned. The threat was sent (1) after Dunnigan confirmed his own identity in writing (tm6.png), (2) after he read Pall's formal wage demand (tm15.png — read receipt: "Read Sunday"), and (3) in direct response to that demand. The fraud accusation underlying the threat is self-refuted by a clause in Dunnigan's own employment agreement. DKIM/SPF/DMARC authentication independently confirms sender identity. All four elements of MCL § 750.213 Prong B are satisfied by documentary evidence alone — no witness cooperation is required to establish probable cause.

2. Summary of Concern

Between approximately May 19, 2026 and May 30, 2026, Jonathan Dunnigan / X-CEED Tech Solutions LLC engaged in the following sequence:

1. Requested and accepted substantial technical services from Daniel Pall, confirmed his role as CTO in writing, discussed payroll and employee number, and granted full server access.
2. Admitted in writing that Daniel would be paid for the work he performed: "you will get paid for the work you did."
3. Withheld all payment and simultaneously:
    - Accused Daniel of fraud without identifying any specific fraudulent statement, amount, date, act, or evidence
    - Declared Daniel a "suspect until deemed innocent" — adopting a standard Dunnigan himself invented in an unrelated iMessage exchange (see Section 4, Step 4)
    - Held all payment indefinitely with no specified process, investigation timeline, or neutral adjudicator
    - Demanded Daniel sign and notarize a statement/admission against himself as the price of any payment or resolution
4. Read Daniel's formal written demand — which specifically named this conduct as coercive payment withholding and stated payment cannot be conditioned on a notarized admission — then responded not with a good-faith itemized dispute, but by escalating to an explicit criminal threat.
5. On May 30, 2026, sent a formal email declaring the matter "closed" and threatening: "Any further attempts to misrepresent your relationship with this company or to utilize our business identity for your own financial gain will be addressed as attempted fraud."

Core Statutory Act — Most Direct § 750.213 Hook

The May 30, 2026 email explicitly threatens Daniel with a fraud accusation if he continues pursuing wages he earned. Under MCL § 750.213, it is a felony to maliciously threaten to accuse another of a crime with intent to compel the person to refrain from doing any act against their will. The act Dunnigan sought to compel Daniel to refrain from: pursuing a legitimate wage claim. The threat is in writing, the sender is DKIM-authenticated, and Dunnigan had already read Daniel's formal demand before sending it.

This is not a payment dispute that evolved into a disagreement. The fraud accusation and threatened criminal prosecution were deployed as instruments of leverage — first to extract a notarized admission, then to permanently suppress the payment claim.

3. Relevant Statute and Its Application

Michigan Penal Code § 750.213 — Malicious threats to extort money https://www.legislature.mi.gov/Laws/MCL?objectName=mcl-750-213

The statute makes it a felony to maliciously threaten to accuse another person of any crime or offense, with intent to:

- Prong A: Extort money or any pecuniary advantage from the person; or
- Prong B: Compel the person to do or refrain from doing any act against their will.

Application to this case — both prongs are potentially met:

Prong A (extort pecuniary advantage): Dunnigan accused Daniel of fraud, withheld earned compensation, and conditioned any payment on Daniel signing a notarized admission. The pecuniary advantage sought: retaining wages owed to Daniel without legal justification. The mechanism: fraud accusation used to justify indefinite withholding, with payment offered only in exchange for a self-incriminating notarized statement.

Prong B (compel to refrain from act against will): The May 30, 2026 email directly tells Daniel that pursuing his wage claim will be "addressed as attempted fraud." The act Daniel is being compelled to refrain from: pursuing payment for services he performed, a lawful act. The compulsion mechanism: threat of criminal accusation. This is the most direct statutory fit in the record.

Parallel federal statute — 18 U.S.C. § 875(d): The May 30 email was transmitted via electronic communication across state lines (sender in Michigan; recipient in California). This independently triggers federal law, which makes it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce any communication threatening to accuse the addressee of a crime with intent to extort. The same email, the same facts, and the same evidence satisfy § 875(d). An IC3.gov referral preserves this as a concurrent federal track.

Jurisdiction: Jonathan Dunnigan is located at 3627 Buckingham, Detroit, Michigan 48224 — within the jurisdiction of the Detroit Police Department 7th Precinct and the Wayne County Prosecutor's Office. The threatening conduct originated in Michigan. Michigan jurisdiction applies regardless of the victim's California location; the statute targets the actor's conduct, not the victim's address. The interstate transmission of the threat additionally supports concurrent federal jurisdiction.

3A. Statutory Elements — Evidence Map (Prong B, Primary Theory)

MCL § 750.213 Prong B requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt of four elements. Each is satisfied by documentary evidence already in this packet:

Element	Evidence	Key Document
1. Defendant made a threat to accuse the complainant of a crime	"Any further attempts to misrepresent your relationship with this company or to utilize our business identity for your own financial gain will be addressed as attempted fraud." — This is a direct written statement that criminal fraud charges will be pursued against Pall.	Exhibit B: May 30, 2026 email (DKIM/SPF/DMARC-pass)
2. The threat was malicious (not a good-faith accusation)	Dunnigan's own drafted employment agreement contains a separation clause: "This Agreement is separate from… any… Xerox / xerox710… agreement." A person who personally drafted that clause cannot in good faith accuse another of fraud for billing both engagements. Additionally, OS-generated timestamps show zero hour overlap between X-CEED and Xerox work periods. The fraud accusation is objectively false on the face of Dunnigan's own documents.	Employment Agreement (Section XX separation clause); Timesheets (timestamp exhibits)
3. The threat was made with intent to compel the person to refrain from an act	The May 30 email was sent in direct response to Pall's formal wage demand, which Dunnigan had already read (tm15.png: "Read Sunday"). The email declares the matter "now closed" and attaches a criminal threat to "any further attempts" to seek compensation. The plain-language purpose is to extinguish pursuit of the wage claim. Dunnigan's response to a formal legal demand was not an itemized factual dispute — it was a criminal threat.	tm15.png (read receipt); May 30 email; tm10–tm15.png (formal demand)
4. The act was against the complainant's will — a lawful act complainant had a legal right to take	Pursuing earned wage compensation is a protected legal right under federal law (FLSA), California Labor Code § 1194, and basic contract law. Dunnigan had no legal authority to demand Pall abandon a lawful compensation claim. People v. Harris, 495 Mich. 120, 845 N.W.2d 477 (2014) — the Michigan Supreme Court's controlling Prong B authority, cited by 107 subsequent opinions — establishes that a conviction under the "against his will"	Employment agreement; Harris, 495 Mich. 120 (2014); People v. Bosca, 310 Mich. App. 1 (2015) prong is warranted where the defendant threatened criminal accusation to compel a lawful act the victim had a right to take.

Prosecutorial note — no witness cooperation required: Every element above is established by (a) the DKIM-authenticated email itself, (b) Dunnigan's own drafted employment agreement, (c) machine-generated OS timestamps, and (d) iMessage read receipts. There is no element that depends on a potentially uncooperative third-party witness. This is a documentary evidence case.

Controlling precedent: People v. Harris, 495 Mich. 120, 845 N.W.2d 477 (Mich. 2014) — Michigan Supreme Court, 107 citing opinions. People v. Bosca, 310 Mich. App. 1, 871 N.W.2d 307 (Mich. Ct. App. 2015) — 332 citing opinions, the most-cited Michigan extortion case, affirming conviction where threat of accusation was used to compel a victim. MCL § 750.213 carries a 20-year maximum felony sentence and is actively prosecuted at the state level, including in 2022 Michigan Supreme Court political corruption matters (People v. Lyon; People v. Peeler; People v. Baird).

4. Chronological Evidence Chain

Step 1 — Employment Relationship Established (May 19, 2026)

Jonathan Dunnigan contacted Daniel Pall and requested technical work beginning May 19, 2026. Dunnigan confirmed Daniel's title as CTO in Discord writing, discussed setting up payroll and assigning an employee number, directed specific technical tasks, and granted full administrative server access.

Employment indicator — iMessage tm1.png: Dunnigan requested Daniel's bank information for direct deposit payroll setup. Daniel provided his Chase routing and account numbers in response. Employers collect direct deposit banking information; contractors receive payment via invoice. This exchange corroborates an employment relationship — not a contractor arrangement — at the outset.

Technical work evidence: 34 Discord screenshots; Git commit logs (60+ commits from May 19–21); 13 Docker containers deployed May 18–22; 37+ authenticated SSH sessions May 21; MASTER_CONTEXT.md infrastructure documentation; full source code for three deployed applications.

Step 2 — Payment Admitted in Writing (During Work Period)

Jonathan Dunnigan stated in Discord:

> "you will get paid for the work you did."

This is a written admission of a payment obligation. It directly contradicts the later $0 position. Evidence: Discord screenshots (preserved, unaltered).

Step 3 — Payment Withheld Without Basis (Post-Termination)

After Daniel's removal on approximately May 29, 2026 at 2:55 AM, Dunnigan stated Daniel would be paid but not the full amount, citing "recent events" — with no itemization, no specific disputed hours, and no legal basis for a reduction.

Step 4 — Fraud Accusation Introduced; "Suspect Until Innocent" Standard Adopted (Late May 2026)

Dunnigan accused Daniel of fraud. He did not identify: the specific fraudulent statement; the dates, hours, or amounts in dispute; any evidence; or any legal authority.

He then declared Daniel a "suspect of fraud until deemed innocent" and withheld all payment indefinitely, with no specified process, no neutral investigator, and no timeline.

Critical fact — the origin of this standard (iMessage tm5.png): The "guilty until proven innocent" language did not arise from any investigation of Daniel's X-CEED work. It originated in a completely separate iMessage exchange about the Xerox/XBUniverse situation, in which Dunnigan texted: "Everyone is guilty until proven innocent, I will talk to both of you in the morning with my lawyer." Dunnigan then transplanted this self-invented standard — created for a different dispute — to justify indefinitely withholding Daniel's X-CEED wages. The standard was not derived from any factual conclusion about Daniel's work; it was an instrument Dunnigan created for a different purpose and repurposed to suppress payment.

Step 5 — Notarized Admission Demanded as Price of Payment (Late May 2026)

Dunnigan demanded Daniel sign and notarize a statement or admission as a precondition to receiving any payment or resolution. The admission was against Daniel's interests. Daniel declined.

This is the most overtly coercive act in the sequence: earned wages conditioned on signing a self-incriminating notarized statement while fraud accusations were actively deployed as leverage.

Step 6 — Daniel Delivers Formal Written Demand; Dunnigan Reads It (Sunday, late May 2026)

Daniel delivered formal written demands via iMessage (tm10.png–tm15.png), including:

- A formal NOTICE OF PAYMENT DUE specifying the amount owed and stating that payment may not be conditioned on any notarized admission
- A Final Written Notice identifying Dunnigan's conduct by name — "coercive payment withholding" — and itemizing the fraud accusation, the "deemed innocent" hold, and the notarized-admission demand as coercive acts

The read receipt — tm15.png: The bottom of Daniel's Final Written Notice shows "Read Sunday." Dunnigan read this message — which expressly named his conduct as coercive and stated he had no legal basis to withhold payment — before sending the May 30 denial letter. He cannot claim he lacked notice of Daniel's position. His decision to escalate to criminal threats rather than provide an itemized dispute was a knowing, deliberate choice made after reading Daniel's formal demand.

Step 7 — Formal Denial Letter with Criminal Threat (May 30, 2026, 7:32 PM PDT)

Jonathan Dunnigan sent a formal email from jzdunnigan@yahoo.com to Daniel at mechaniel@gmail.com. The email:

- Refused all payment and declared the matter "now closed"

- Accused Daniel of fraud and "double-billing" without providing any itemized analysis, specific dates, or amounts in dispute
- Stated: "Any further attempts to misrepresent your relationship with this company or to utilize our business identity for your own financial gain will be addressed as attempted fraud."

In plain terms: if you continue to seek wages you earned, we will pursue criminal fraud charges against you.

This is an explicit written threat to use criminal-accusation machinery to compel Daniel to abandon a lawful payment claim — issued after Dunnigan confirmed his own identity (tm6.png), after he read Daniel's formal demand (tm15.png read receipt), and in direct response to that demand.

Authentication: Email file preserved with complete headers; DKIM-authenticated; SPF-pass; DMARC-pass. Sender identity confirmed independently by tm6.png.

Step 8 — Daniel's Formal Rebuttal (June 2, 2026)

Daniel sent a formal rebuttal to jzdunnigan@yahoo.com on June 2, 2026, rejecting all of X-CEED's positions, demanding an itemized factual dispute within 48 hours, and preserving all rights including the right to submit evidence to appropriate authorities for review.

5. The Pattern in Summary

Date (approx.)	Dunnigan's Act	Effect on Daniel
May 19, 2026	Requests bank info for direct deposit payroll; confirms CTO title; says "you will get paid for the work you did"	Payment legitimately expected
Post-termination (~May 29)	Will pay, but reduced, due to "recent events" — no itemization	Payment arbitrarily reduced
Late May	Fraud accusation issued; "suspect until deemed innocent" standard invoked — no evidence, no process	All payment withheld indefinitely
Late May	Sign a notarized admission — or receive nothing	Payment conditioned on self-incrimination
Sunday (late May)	Reads Daniel's formal demand and Final Written Notice (tm15.png: "Read Sunday")	Dunnigan is formally on notice; chooses to escalate instead of dispute
May 30, 2026	"Fraud." "Matter closed." "Any further attempts… addressed as attempted fraud."	Criminal threat issued to suppress lawful wage claim

Note on knowing/willful conduct: The read receipt on tm15.png is legally significant. Dunnigan sent the May 30 criminal threat knowing Daniel had formally named his conduct as coercive and had demanded an itemized dispute. He chose to respond with a criminal threat rather than a factual rebuttal. This is not a good-faith payment dispute that escalated — it is a knowing exercise of coercive leverage.

6. Suspect's Likely Defense Is Pre-Refuted by His Own Documents

Dunnigan's entire justification for withholding payment and issuing criminal threats was the "double-billing fraud" accusation: his claim that Daniel had billed X-CEED and Xerox for the same hours. This accusation is internally self-refuting — destroyed by a clause in Dunnigan's own drafted employment agreement.

The Self-Refuting Contradiction

The X-CEED employment agreement drafted by Dunnigan contains an explicit separation clause:

> "This Agreement is separate from, and does not amend, any independent contractor agreement involving Xerox / xerox710 or any separate network, server, or community."

Dunnigan drafted this language. He therefore knew — at the time he accused Daniel of fraud — that the two engagements were legally and factually separate by design.

The following table shows Dunnigan's two irreconcilable positions:

Dunnigan's Position A (to deny X-CEED wages)	Dunnigan's Position B (to justify fraud accusation)
"The X-CEED agreement and the Xerox agreement are separate and do not overlap." (His own drafted separation clause)	"You double-billed by charging both X-CEED and Xerox for the same work." (His fraud accusation)

These two positions cannot both be true. If the contracts are separate (his words), then billing both is not double-billing — it is billing two separate clients for two separate bodies of work. If they overlap enough to constitute double-billing (his accusation), then he drafted a false separation clause into an agreement he was using simultaneously to deny payment.

A person who personally drafted a "these are separate" clause cannot in good faith accuse another person of fraud for performing both engagements. The fraud accusation was not a good-faith factual conclusion from an investigation. It was a label applied retroactively to justify withholding, using reasoning that Dunnigan's own written documents refute.

Machine-generated timestamp evidence also refutes the accusation independently: The full-period timesheet (XBUniverse_Timesheet_Evidence_May19-28_2026.txt) shows May 19–24 was exclusively X-CEED work; the Xerox contract did not exist until May 25, 2026 at 2:38 PM. There were no overlapping hours. The corrected Xerox timesheet (XBUniverse_Timesheet_Evidence_May25-28_2026.txt) expressly states: "No billable hours are claimed prior to contract execution." The double-billing accusation is objectively false based on OS-generated evidence Daniel did not create or control.

Significance for law enforcement review: When a fraud accusation is demonstrably false on its face — contradicted by the accuser's own written documents and machine-generated evidence — its use as leverage to withhold wages and suppress payment through criminal threats is consistent with the coercion theory under MCL § 750.213. A genuine good-faith fraud belief would not be self-refuted by the accuser's own drafted contract clause.

7. What Daniel Did NOT Do

- Daniel did not access X-CEED systems after removal
- Daniel did not publish or disclose X-CEED secrets, tokens, credentials, or customer data
- The work archive was prepared for continuity, handoff, and proof of work — and explicitly excluded all sensitive material: .env files, SSL/SSH private keys, customer mail data, password hashes, Stripe API keys, and Cloudflare tokens. This exclusion is documented in README_ARCHIVE_PURPOSE.md, which Dunnigan's "unauthorized acquisition" accusation ignores entirely.
- Daniel did not sign the demanded notarized admission
- Daniel did not threaten Dunnigan with criminal charges at any point — he stated only that he would submit evidence to appropriate authorities for review
- Daniel did not alter, fabricate, or crop any screenshot, log, or document in this packet

8. Evidence for Law Enforcement

A. Discord Screenshots (34 images)

Files: Discord Messages #1.jpg, #2.jpg, DM3.jpg – dm34.jpg (Comunications/ folder)

Full conversation capturing: work assignments, CTO title confirmation, payroll and employee number discussions, payment admission, fraud accusations, and notarized-admission demand. These messages are expressly designated as admissible evidence under Section XIII of the employment agreement.

B. Formal Denial Email — Primary § 750.213 Document

File: Comunications/Formal Rejection of Payment Demand and Notice to Cease Unauthorized Communications.eml

Sender: Jonathan Dunnigan, jzdunnigan@yahoo.com

Authentication: DKIM-pass, SPF-pass, DMARC-pass

Date/time: May 30, 2026 at 7:32 PM PDT

Key language: "Any further attempts to misrepresent your relationship with this company or to utilize our business identity for your own financial gain will be addressed as attempted fraud."

This email was sent after Dunnigan confirmed his own identity by text (tm6.png) and after he read Daniel's formal demand (tm15.png read receipt). It is the clearest single document supporting the § 750.213 "compel to refrain from act against will" prong.

C. iMessage Conversation — 15 Screenshots (tm1.png – tm15.png)

tm1.png	Daniel provides Chase routing and account numbers to Dunnigan for direct deposit payroll setup. Employers collect direct deposit banking information; contractors receive payment via invoice. This exchange corroborates an employment relationship at the outset.
tm5.png	Dunnigan texts: "Everyone is guilty until proven innocent, I will talk to both of you in the morning with my lawyer." This is the documented origin of the "deemed innocent" standard. It was created by Dunnigan in the context of a separate Xerox dispute — not any investigation of Daniel's X-CEED work — and was later transplanted to suppress Daniel's X-CEED payment claim. The standard was invented as a tool, not derived from evidence.
tm6.png	Dunnigan personally texts his email address jzdunnigan@yahoo.com to Daniel. Independently confirms Dunnigan as the author of the May 30 denial/threat letter, beyond DKIM authentication alone.
tm10–tm13.png	Daniel's formal NOTICE OF PAYMENT DUE delivered via iMessage. Specifies amount owed and expressly states: payment cannot be conditioned on signing or notarizing any admission. Sent Sunday at 11:46 AM.
tm14–tm15.png	Daniel's "Final Written Notice" identifying Dunnigan's conduct as "coercive payment withholding" and naming the fraud accusation, "deemed innocent" hold, and notarized-admission demand as coercive acts.
Read receipt — tm15.png	"Read Sunday" — Dunnigan read Daniel's Final Written Notice before sending the May 30 criminal threat. He cannot claim lack of notice. His response — a criminal threat rather than an itemized factual dispute — was a knowing, deliberate act made after being formally advised of Daniel's position.

D. Employment Agreement — Self-Refuting Fraud Accusation

File: xceed_employment_agreement_daniel_pall_corrected_separate.pdf (+ 7 page images)

- Daniel's name, email, and date 5/19/2026 filled in on signature page — corroborating May 19 as work start date
- Role named as Chief Technology Officer (CTO), full-time, at-will

- Michigan address (3627 Buckingham, Detroit, MI 48224) — confirms MCL § 750.213 jurisdiction
- Section XIII: Discord messages expressly designated as admissible evidence of compensation terms and disputes
- Section XX: Discord acknowledgments by authorized representatives may constitute acceptance — undercuts X-CEED's "no signed agreement" defense
- Separation clause: Expressly states X-CEED agreement is separate from any Xerox/xerox710 contractor agreement — makes Dunnigan's double-billing accusation impossible to sustain in good faith (see Section 6 above)

E. Technical Work Evidence — Establishing Payment Claim Is Genuine

The following machine-generated files establish that work was actually performed, defeating the "fraudulent claim" framing:

- git_log_skyhigh-hosting-bot.txt — 60+ commits, May 19–21; initial commit timestamped May 19 at 6:52 PM
- git_log_skyhigh-bot.txt — initial commit May 19, corroborating same-day work start
- docker_container_creation_times.txt — 13 containers deployed May 18–22
- docker_image_build_times.txt — repeated build cycles May 19–22
- filesystem_and_container_timestamps.txt — OS-level file creation/modification timestamps on server artifacts
- github_commits_server_timestamps.txt — independent GitHub timestamp corroboration
- ssh_sessions_76.33.191.130.txt — 37+ authenticated SSH sessions, May 21
- MASTER_CONTEXT.md — comprehensive infrastructure documentation proving engineer-level involvement
- README_ARCHIVE_PURPOSE.md — states archive was for continuity, handoff, and proof of work; explicitly lists all sensitive material that was excluded

F. Two Timesheets — Refuting Double-Billing Accusation by Timestamps

- XBUniverse_Timesheet_Evidence_May19-28_2026.txt — Shows May 19–24 was exclusively X-CEED work. The Xerox contract did not exist until May 25 at 2:38 PM. Downloads folder entries show X-CEED LLC filing PDFs, IRS EIN, and employment agreement draft downloaded May 21–22 — prior to any Xerox involvement.
- XBUniverse_Timesheet_Evidence_May25-28_2026.txt — Corrected Xerox-specific timesheet. Expressly states: "No billable hours are claimed prior to contract execution." Includes VS Code session logs, 60+ timestamped source files, and live game test log (REDmodLog.txt). Contains zero overlap with X-CEED hours.

G. Daniel's Rebuttal Email

Formal rebuttal to jzdunnigan@yahoo.com rejecting X-CEED's positions and demanding an itemized factual dispute.

9. Charging Request and Requested Law Enforcement Action

Daniel Pall respectfully requests that law enforcement take the following actions:

1. Accept this referral and assign an incident/report number. This formally documents the matter in the public record and opens the file regardless of immediate charging decisions.
2. Present the May 30, 2026 email to the Wayne County Prosecutor's Office — Charging Unit for a charging decision on MCL § 750.213, Prong B. The element analysis is in Section 3A above. The probable cause showing is documentary and does not require a search warrant or witness cooperation to establish the threshold elements.
3. Separately present the notarized-admission demand (Discord screenshots and iMessages) for a charging decision on MCL § 750.213, Prong A — conditioning earned wage payment on signing a self-incriminating notarized statement is a separate act of extortion under the pecuniary-advantage prong.
4. Refer to the FBI Detroit Field Office / IC3.gov for the parallel federal charge under 18 U.S.C. § 875(d) (interstate electronic threat to accuse of crime to extort). The same May 30 email constitutes this offense independently. IC3 complaint number can be provided to law enforcement upon request.
5. Probable investigative effort required (minimal): Sender identity is already confirmed by two independent methods — DKIM authentication on the email header and Dunnigan's own iMessage text (tm6.png) providing his email address to Daniel. A Yahoo! records warrant may not be necessary to establish sender identity, but is available as corroboration if desired. No cooperating witness is required; the documentary record is self-contained.

Recommended reporting path: DPD 7th Precinct (Dunnigan's address at 3627 Buckingham, Detroit MI 48224) → Forward to Wayne County Prosecutor's Office Screening Unit → Parallel IC3/FBI referral for federal track. If DPD declines jurisdiction due to victim's out-of-state location, Michigan State Police Cyber Crime Unit is an alternative receiving agency.
